

Changes to the Learning Disability Core Skills Education and Training Framework

Skills for Health, NHS England and Health Education England are working together.

We are working on the Learning Disability Core Skills Education and Training Framework.

The Learning Disability Core Skills Education and Training Framework is for training health and social care staff.

It is a list of all the things health and social care staff need to know to support people with a learning disability.

Organisations can use the framework to help them plan learning disability training.

It was written 3 years ago in 2015.

We think it needs some changes to make sure it is up to date.

We want to make sure training for health and social care staff helps them to:

- Make health care services better for people with a learning disability.

- Have more understanding of people with a learning disability.

- Do something about the big health problems for people with a learning disability, like epilepsy and constipation.

We are working with lots of organisations in our project steering group.

The steering group are helping us to come up with ideas about how we might update the framework.

We will have an idea of what the new framework may look like early next year.

Then we want to show you our ideas for the framework to find out what you think.

If you want to tell us what you think, fill in the form.

When we are ready, we will tell you about our ideas.

We will ask you what you think.

We will use your ideas to make the changes to the Learning Disability Core Skills and Education Framework.

You can let us know how to contact you in the form.

You do not need to give us any information you do not want us to know.

We will not use your information to send you adverts.
