

Craig Davis Case Study Charge Hand

Biography

After Craig left school in 1984 he completed a BTEC Diploma in Hotel Management and spent some time working in hotels as a waiter and then an Assistant Pub Manager.

After spending some time travelling in Europe and working in a bar in Greece, he returned back to the UK and began working in a sandwich company, making and delivering sandwiches to clients. Having learnt the tricks of the trade, he decided to start his own sandwich business and ran this with a colleague for 2 years before deciding to go travelling again.

After a year Craig returned home and in 1998 came to work at the Royal United Hospital Bath as a ground man and environmental porter. He enjoyed working within a hospital environment and after two years decided to apply for a job in theatres as a Operating Department Orderly (ODO), and it is here he has remained ever since. Between May 2000 and 2005 Craig was promoted to Assistant Charge Hand and in May 2005 was promoted to Charge Hand which involves supervising a team of ODO's in many different capacities.

Craig is still employed in this role, and has even added to his qualifications by completing an NVQ 2 in Support Services which he has found to be very beneficial in his job. He has been married for three years and has a young son and describes himself as very content with life in general.
